Seminar

AEFR makes its COP: COP28 feedback and Transition Plans

With the conclusion of COP 28 in Dubai, and AEFR having just published its latest debate paper on transition plans, we have decided to open 2024 by highlighting what will be one of the central issues of the year: the implementation of CSRD and the establishment of transition plans.

With this in mind, the seminar will open with a review of COP28, before focusing on transition plans, from the European legislative overview to their uses and objectives, and the process by which they are drawn up.

While it seems increasingly necessary to draw up transition plans, there is sometimes a great deal of confusion between the various legislative texts and/or private initiatives that frame or inspire them, the form they should take and the concrete elements they should include. Similarly, the players for whom they are intended are still sometimes poorly identified. In its debate paper, published in November 2023, AEFR proposes to answer these questions by focusing on 3 main areas: the content and form of a transition plan (a), the processes involved in drawing them up (b), and finally their proper use in order to make them a useful tool for financing the ecological transition.

If the transition plans are to be a real tool in the service of the ecological transition and not just a mere communication tool, they need to share a common architecture.

This raises many questions. Who are the players involved? What objectives should be pursued, how should environmental impact be defined, and what level of information should be provided? Should the transition plan be certified by a third party to reinforce its credibility? These are just some of the issues that will be discussed this morning.
